Building Success Together

Dear Parents and Guardians,

We would like to call your attention to concerning social media videos posted recently that have the potential to upset children.

Recent national news reports circulating on social media have highlighted content in videos posted on sites such as You Tube, You Tube Kids and other media sites that target young children and encourages self-harm and suicide, for example the “Momo Challenge.” As a result, we’ve heard concerns from students and parents.

This is a good reminder to monitor and review your child’s online activities and talk with them about what they are viewing. We want to provide you with resources that will be helpful in discussing this openly with your child. Information from the School Community Intervention and Prevention Program (SCIP) website highlights some things families can do to promote online safety:
